Utah In Review - 1979

Utahns' concern with economy in government and reduction of the taxpayers' burden continued through 1979, but a slowdown in some major sources of state revenue put a new light on the situation by the end of the year.

Tax reduction was the No. 1 issue when the 1979 Legislature convened, and action finally centered on the property tax, although a vigorous effort was made to shift the emphasis from property to the sales tax by exempting food from the latter impost.

After extended debate, a property tax relief "package" was passed, comprising a tax rebate to homeowners with a companion measure giving comparable relief to renters; a four-mill reduction in the property levy for the uniform school fund, and an extension of the "circuit-breaker" law which provides property tax assistance to low-income, elderly property owners and renters. First estimates of the total cost of the package were close to $75 million, but this figure proved to be high because the cost of the "rebate" feature, first estimated at $52 million, was found to be $45 million when the program was implemented.

Within a few weeks of the adjournment of the 1979 Legislature, indications appeared that Utah revenues might fall short of the estimates used by the Legislature to balance the 1979-80 budget. In mid-July the Governor ordered an across-the-board (with specific exceptions) 4% reduction in general fund, uniform school fund, and transportation fund appropriations. At the time they were ordered, the cutbacks were the subject of complaints and of considerable controversy. However, by the end of 1979 it appeared that the Governor's action was justified and that a deficit would have developed by the end of the 1979-80 fiscal year if they had not been imposed.

Some factors in the 1979 slowdown in state revenues, most of which appear likely to continue to at least some degree in 1980 and 1981 were: (1) a decline in tourism due to the petroleum crisis; (2) a reduction in sales of and sales tax from petroleum related hard goods such as automobiles and recreational vehicles; (3) a slowdown in home construction, affecting sales tax in a number of areas such as building materials, furniture, and household appliances; (4) a new Utah law providing sales tax credits to businesses purchasing and installing pollution-control equipment; (5) the psychological effect of continuing inflation and predictions of a coming recession, which induced many people to pay off old debts and avoid contracting new ones instead of spending for new consumer goods; and (6) the sizable increase in the property tax in Salt Lake County in 1979, reducing the amount available for normal purchases by many families in the state's largest county.

Also reducing money available for normal spending in 1979, but not carrying over into 1980 and beyond, were contributions made by members of the L.D.S. Church for construction of the Jordan River Temple.

Utah's economy appeared to be holding up better than that of some other parts of the nation in 1979, but the business slowdown at the national level and recurrent talk of the possibility of a more serious recession may have had some negative effect on Utah revenue collections.

The 1980 budget session of the Legislature continued a program of property tax relief, but with some change from the 1979 pattern. Both homeowner and renters will receive a tax credit in 1980, but generally in smaller amounts than was provided by the 1979 rebate program. The total amount provided to finance the 1980 program was $31.4 million, compared to the $45 million in the 1979 program.

Several fiscal question marks were clearly visible as the 1980 budget session ended. The Legislature balanced the budget by using revenue estimates $2.1 million higher than those used by the Governor, and the legislative projections also assumed that the federal revenue-sharing program would be continued beyond its scheduled expiration on September 30, 1980.

The possibility of having on the 1980 Utah ballot a proposal to remove the sales tax from food further complicated the state's fiscal outlook. If a food sales tax exemption were approved on top of the granting of substantial property tax relief, drastic adjustments would probably become necessary.

While the mood of property tax relief continued in the 1980 legislative session, proponents of tax and spending limitation in Utah received a major setback when the Legislature failed to implement previously-enacted limitation legislation.

POPULATION

Utah continued its pattern of steady growth, reaching an estimated population of 1,367,000 in mid-1979. This was 3.8% higher than the (revised) 1978 population estimate of 1,317,000. The rate of increase was above the 2.9% annual average increase since the 1970 census. Utah was the sixth fastest-growing state in the nation between 1970 and 1979, being surpassed in percentage population increase only by Nevada, Arizona, Wyoming, Alaska, and Florida.

While two-thirds of Utah's 1978-79

population gain and almost three-fourths of the 1970-79 growth were due to natural increase (excess of live births over deaths), there remains clear indication of steady in-migration during the 1970's. This trend is in marked contrast to the pattern of out-migration from Utah in many recent decades.

A major reason for Utah's large natural increase is the state's relatively high birth rate--30.0 per 1,000 population compared to 15.4 per 1,000 for the entire nation--and comparatively low death rate, 5.7 per 1,000 compared to the U.S. figure of 8.6 per 1,000.

Utah's growth rate, 1970-1979, was not evenly distributed over the state. Emery County's population increased more than 91%, while neighboring Grand County grew by only 8%. Leading percentage population gainers after Emery County were Duchesne (80%), Washington (73%), Summit (65%), and Kane (60%) Counties.

Some Utah municipalities grew much more rapidly during the 1970's. Sandy and West Jordan in Salt Lake County registered population increases of more than 400%, while East Layton in Davis County had growth of more than 300%. A total of 17 Utah municipalities at least doubled their 1970 population figures by 1979.

Salt Lake City and Ogden, Utah's two largest cities, both lost population in the 1970's.

PERSONAL INCOME

Total personal income in Utah in 1979 was estimated to be $9.9 billion, up 15% over 1978. Utah per capita income in 1979 was an estimated $7,249, which was 83% of the $8,701 per capita income figure for the nation.

In 1978 Utah's per capita income was $6,566 compared to the national figure of $7,836. Utah ranked 43rd among the 50 states in per capita income for the year 1978. Utah has not held a higher rank than 40th in per capita income since 1971 (when it held 39th rank). Utah has ranked as high as 29th among the states in per capita income, but the latest year in which the state held that rank was 1964.

COST OF LIVING

The cost of living continued to rise in 1979, and the average of the Bureau of Labor Statistics' consumer price index for the twelve months was 217.4 (1967=100), 11.3% above the average for 1978. In December, 1979, the index stood at 229.9.

The price rise varied in different areas of the economy. The 1979 increase in the price index for all commodities was 12.0%, while the increase in the average cost of services was 10.7%. Food prices rose an average of 11.7%, while the price of housing was up 11.9%; but the cost of owning a home rose 14.8% while renters' costs increased only 6.9%. The cost of transportation rose 15.7%, reflecting the energy crisis. The cost of private transportation increased 16.4%, but the cost of public transportation rose only 4.2%. the cost of apparel and its upkeep went up only a modest 3.4%.

The cost of medical care, which had increased more than 340% since 1950 and had frequently been in the vanguard of the price advance, rose 8.8% in 1979, less than the increase for many other items.

HIGHWAYS AND TRANSPORTATION

The story of Utah's highway program in 1979 was a mixture of good and bad news.

The good news was that the state made impressive progress toward erasing the backlog in its "state construction" and interstate construction programs, thanks largely to the return from the two-cent-a-gallon increase in the state motor fuels tax and to increased availability of federal discretionary fund for interstate construction.

The bad news was that the continuing rise in the cost of petroleum and petroleum products--affecting both highway revenues and construction costs--appeared effectively to have nullified the increase in the motor fuels tax rate by the end of the year.

The "state construction" program is not strictly speaking a construction program, but more of an advanced maintenance program in which deteriorated stretches of highway are not only restored to top condition, but also improved by incorporating the most modern highway advances that have been developed since they were originally constructed. This re-building and up-grading is much less costly than new construction to the same standards.

On the basis of a large backlog in the state construction program, and the high potential cost of letting it go to the point where new construction would be necessary, Utah highway officials were able to convince the Legislature that an increase in motor fuels and special fuels tax rates was advisable. The 9-cents-a-gallon rate (up from 7 cents) went into effect July 1, 1978. The added revenue produced by the tax increase was effectively used to attack the backlog in major highway rehabilitation projects (the state construction program) and about $34 million had been expended in this area by mid-1979. This represented about a two-year catch-up effort in that program. However, as the petroleum crisis worsened, motor fuel purchases slowed markedly while the cost of asphalt and other petroleum-based highway construction materials rose rapidly. By August 1979 there was no longer money available for the state construction program after higher construction and maintenance priorities had been taken care of. By the end of the year the situation in state construction was much as it had been in 1977, except that most of the accumulated backlog had been erased.

Utah made significant progress in its interstate highway construction program in 1979. The federal government provided substantial amounts of "discretionary funds"--funds allocated at the discretion of the U.S. Department of Transportation to be used where they would be most effective, without regard to standard allocation formulas. Utah received an extra $83 million in discretionary funds in 1979, the equivalent of almost two years normal interstate funding.

Total highway expenditures in Utah in fiscal 1979 were $160.4 million, more than was spent in any other single area of government except education ($524.5 million) and public welfare ($173.2 million). Highway expenditures represented 13% of all state spending for the year.

Public transportation became an increasingly large factor in Utah's over-all transportation picture in 1979, at least along the Wasatch Front. More than 19 million passengers were carried by the Utah Transit Authority, operating in Salt Lake, Davis, and Weber Counties. The earlier decline and more recent dramatic rise in public transportation passengers is shown on the graph preceding the section on Transportation in this Statistical Review of Government.

PUBLIC WELFARE

Utah expenditures for public welfare in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1979 were $173.2 million, accounting for 14% of total state spending for the year. Education was the only area in which more state money was expended in 1979 than for welfare.

Welfare expenditures exceeded highway expenditures for the second successive year, after an extended period during which the positions were reversed. Since the start of full-scale construction on the interstate highway system, Utah highway expenditures have generally exceeded those for public assistance.

A major reason for the rise in public assistance cost was the rapid increase in medicaid expenditures in Utah. These were nearly 26% higher in 1978-79 than in the previous year, and the 1977-78 medicaid bill was up more than 30% over that of 1976-77. The average annual increase in Utah medicaid expenditures over the past four years has been nearly 24%, a rate which would increase the state's medicaid costs eight-fold in the next decade if they should continue to climb at the same rate.

EDUCATION

Education at all levels took the largest share of Utah state and local expenditures once more in 1979. In the year ended June 30, 1979 more than 42% of all state expenditures, and nearly half of all combined state and local expenditures in Utah, were devoted to education.

Utah spending for education increased 767% (8.7 times) between the school years 1949-50 and 1978-79 in terms of actual dollars. In terms of constant dollars, removing the effects of inflation, this increase was 201% (3.0 times), an average annual increase in real expenditures for education of 3.9% a year.

Fall enrollments in Utah public schools were up 2.5% in 1979 over 1978, and 9.4% above 1970 enrollments. There appeared strong indications that enrollments would continue to increase in future years. If present trends continue, it is expected that there will develop an even greater surge in Utah school enrollments than was produced by the post-World-War II "baby boom".

The enrollment surge was still some years away from Utah college campuses, but higher education enrollments continued to advance at a moderate pace. The growth, however, appeared to be principally in vocational education. Between the academic years 1971-72 and 1978-79, total enrollments at Utah's nine post-secondary institutions increased at an average annual rate of 1.7%; but enrollments in the seven academic institutions dropped slightly--4% over the seven-year period--while enrollments at Utah's two technical colleges showed a 55% increase.

TAXES PAID

Utahns paid approximately $1.2 billion in state and local taxes in the year ended June 10, 1979.

Sales taxes provided the largest single source of tax revenues (31.5% of all state and local taxes for year), followed by property taxes (26.8%), and income taxes (22.4%).

The state general sales tax, chief support of the state general funds generated almost $294 million in fiscal 1979, while local sales taxes returned $71.5 million to counties and municipalities.

Residential properties brought $143 million in property tax, while business and commercial properties paid $122 million during the year. Property tax revenues go to the support of public schools, counties, municipalities, and special districts.

Utah's individual income tax brought about $227 million into the treasury, and an additional $33 million was added by corporate income taxes.

Highway user taxes provided more than $88 million in 1979, accounting for 7.6% of state and local tax revenues.

* In some municipalities more than one levy may be applied within the corporate boundaries of the city. Levy shown is that which is imposed in the main portion of the city.

 Includes library tax.

In the year property is revalued under the State Tax Commission equalization program, mill levy for operations must be adjusted downward.

EXPLANATION OF PROPERTY TAX TABLES

The remaining tables in this section (pages 73 - 98) provide detailed information about property tax assessed valuations, mill levies, taxes charged, and total levies imposed by all taxing units within Utah.

During 1979 there were 460 separate governmental units that could levy a property tax. This included 29 counties, 40 school districts, 223 cities and towns, and 168 special districts. Because of the overlapping boundaries of some of these districts, there were a total of 674 separate taxing areas in the state. There were , for example, 117 different taxing areas in Weber County, 130 in Salt Lake County and 64 in Davis County. Conceivably, a different overall tax levy could be imposed in each of these separate taxing areas.

Any tabular presentation of these data will, of course, involve a number of problems and complexities. The tables which follow present detailed property tax data for the various taxing districts and taxing areas of the state. A simple summary of the property tax mill levies imposed in the major cities and towns of Utah during 1979 and selected earlier years is shown by the table found on page 71 of this publication.

In order to use the detailed tables, it is necessary to know the specific geographic l: ation of the property for which the information is being sought. This may be established from the tax notice (providing that the various units which are authorized to impose the tax are listed on the tax notice) or by inquiry at the county offices.

The following explanation describes what is contained in these tables:

Column 1 lists the governmental unit levying the tax and the taxing area in those cases where there may be more than one overall tax levy imposed within a taxing jurisdiction. The taxing area usually is designated by a series of code letters following the name of the municipality or school district. Each code letter refers to some special taxing district which is authorized to impose a property tax. Thus, "Beaver Schools - A" refers to the unincorporated area of the Beaver School District within Beaver County which is also within the boundaries of Beaver County Special Service District #1 (Fire Protection) - A.

Column 2 shows the assessed value of all taxable property within the taxing jurisdiction or within the taxing area.

Column 3 lists the mill levy imposed by the taxing jurisdiction.

Column 4 lists the property taxes charged by the taxing jurisdiction. This was obtained by multiplying the assessed valuation in column 2 by the mill levy in column 3.

Column 5 lists the total property tax levy imposed during 1979 by all taxing jurisdictions which have authority to levy a property tax within the taxing area. This would include the county levy, the school district levy, the city or town levy (if any), and all special district levies (if any). The levy is expressed in terms of mills, or dollars of tax per $1,000 assessed valuation.

Columns 6 - 10 list the combined property tax levy imposed within the taxing jurisdiction during a number of selected prior years (1978, 1975, 1970, 1960, and 1950).

a/ The code letter (Z) refers to property in the Central Weber Sewer District (code B) that is exempt from the tax imposed by the district as a result of a court order.

* Because of the overlapping boundaries of the various special districts in the state, more than one levy may apply within a municipality or school district. For example, 12 different overall mill levies are applied within Ogden City and 11 different levies are found in Salt Lake City. Actually there are 130 different taxing areas in Salt Lake County, 117 in Weber County, and 64 in Davis County. In the preceding county tabulations, the different taxing areas are designated by one or more code letters following the name of the municipality or school district. Each code letter refers to some special taxing district which imposes or is authorized to impose a levy within the district. Thus, "Weber Schools - A, B, J, K" refers to the taxing area in the Weber School District (outside of any incorporated city or town) which is in the Weber Basin Water District (A), Central Weber Sewer District (B), the Bona Vista Water District (J), and the Weber County Mosquito District (K). Of course, in addition to these taxing district levies, the countywide levies for state schools and county purposes are applied in the described taxing area. In the case of Weber County only, the code letter (Z) refers to property located within the boundaries of the Central Weber Sewer District which is exempt from the tax levied by the district.
